A Message from Professor Gulu

Being unprepared or too busy to protect your child from online predators is definitely unacceptable. To every parent or guardian, please show that you care by investing your time and energy in helping your child learn responsible and safe online behavior. Needless to say, online predators are counting on your unavailability and lack of interest to help improve their chances of making your child their next victim. And kids, please ask your parents, teachers, and counselors for information and helpful resources on Internet safety.

My Birthday Gift

Sunlight melted the early morning dew as a flock of birds flew high overhead in the small town of Albany, Georgia.

Susan, a beautiful 13-year-old girl with curly auburn hair and big brown eyes, pulled up a chair to her computer and began to type.

“Okay, I’m online,” Susan whispered softly to herself, as she paused a brief second before entering the children's Internet chat room. Susan was excited to have received a brand new computer for her birthday, and she spent most of her free time chatting online.

As Susan scanned the list of online chat members, she found Reggie's sign-on greeting, which read: Reggie- "Falling 4 u Sweet Sue."

"Oh, yes!" Susan smiled and expressed excitedly, discovering Reggie's online greeting. "Reggie wants to chat with me. He's so...nice," Susan muttered softly to herself.

Susan had the urge to reply immediately.

She typed: “U have no idea how I look. How could u fall so quickly 4 a stranger?” Susan asked, unable to keep a grin off her face.

Reggie replied, “Real beauty goes beyond the things u see—it’s n your heart, hidden n the words u speak.”

Susan was flattered by Reggie’s remarks. She had been chatting with Reggie for three weeks through the children’s Internet chat room.

No one has ever made me feel so special, Susan thought. Reggie says the nicest things. But is he only teasing me? Well, why not ask? Susan contemplated.

Children in the Chat Room

Susan typed: "R u 4 real? Do u really like me?"
she asked Reggie.

"My time is 2 valuable 2 waste on people or things I don't consider 2 b very important," Reggie replied.
