A Message from Professor Gulu

Who you are and what you're capable of accomplishing in life can be totally ruined by alcohol and drug abuse. Show that you value your life, health, family, and friendships by making wise decisions. Walk away from those who encourage you to abuse alcohol and drugs, and talk with your parents, teachers, and counselors regularly about day-to-day concerns, problems and issues.

Remember, PLAY IT SAFE!

I would like to express the deepest appreciation to my beautiful wife, Ann Branch-Floyd, whose guidance, encouragement, and faith challenged me to reach new heights. Without her inspiration and persistent help, this book and the entire Professor Gulu learning series would not have been possible.

I would also like to thank Bilal Waajid of Waajid Branding & Marketing for laying out the book cover design.

Finally, very special thanks to First Editing, Inc., and my aunt, Barbara Wright Coleman of Albany, Georgia, for editing and proofreading.

My Big Break

The last strip of crispy fried bacon was removed from the frying pan as Bobby, a tall and slender seventeen-year-old African-American male, headed down the stairway.

“Breakfast is ready,” his mother beckoned him politely.

Bobby’s mother, Mrs. Sanders, worked for a local bookstore, and she made it her business to have Bobby read at least one book every month.

Bobby's father, Mr. Sanders, was a grumpy and ill-tempered auto mechanic who serviced cars in their backyard and complained about bills.

"Good morning, son," his father said, spreading raspberry jam on his hot buttered toast.

"Good morning," Bobby replied, sitting down at the breakfast table. "Our coach informed the team that three college scouts will be at the game tomorrow. This may be my big break, and possibly an opportunity for a scholarship," Bobby explained, staring straight at his father.

Suddenly, his father began to laugh.

“What’s so funny?” Bobby asked his father.

Mr. Sanders seemed very amused by his son’s wishful thinking.

“Come on. You? A scholarship? You must be dreaming!” his father responded.

“John! Don’t be so hard on the boy,” his wife complained.

“Honey, a little truth won’t hurt the kid. After all, whose fault is it that he didn’t break the school’s record last week? Just one basket away and he couldn’t make it!” his father exclaimed.

Bobby jumped up from the table and burst into tears.

“Okay! So I didn’t break the record! But we won the game...we won!” he cried out painfully. “Nothing is ever good enough for you! Nothing!” Bobby shouted as he ran to his room.

“John, you can’t continue to talk to him that way,” his wife commented.

“Honey, I just don’t want the kid to grow up believing in something that will never happen,” he said.

“Why? Because it didn’t happen for you?” she confronted her husband. “Sweetheart, you were a great baseball player, but you had a choice, and you chose drugs and alcohol. And now it’s Bobby's turn, and you're afraid to support him because you didn't have the guts to go for it," she expressed angrily.

Mr. Sanders stood up, reached across the table, and slapped the spoon out of his wife's hand.

"How dare you talk that crap to me," he grumbled, pointing his finger in her face.

Her eyes gleamed with fear as Mrs. Sanders cautiously wiped the food from her lap.

"What is wrong with you?" she shouted, backing away from the table.

"Nothing's wrong with me," he boasted, while hastily walking toward the refrigerator.

Breathing hard, and with a look of disgust on her face, Mrs. Sanders yelled loudly.

“Go ahead! Grab a beer! It’s what you do best. Oh, what is happening to this family?” she cried, very upset.

“Hey, nothing’s wrong with this family, “he muttered, opening the beer and walking out of the kitchen.
